Activity Introduction

To boost the children's interest in the theme of "Caring for the Environment" and in the Chinese storybook about farms, our school organized a field trip to the Kadoorie Farm and Botanic Garden. Through this visit, the children were able to observe animals' physical characteristics, behaviors, and habitats closely while also appreciating the unique shapes, colors, and growth patterns of various plants, thereby cultivating their observational skills and curiosity about the natural ecosystem.

In this activity, we hope the children can understand the close relationship between humans and the environment and develop a positive attitude toward caring for nature. Finally, the children had a picnic together in the natural surroundings, experiencing the joy of being outdoors. By bringing their lunchboxes, water bottles, and towels, they practiced eco-friendly living and further enhanced their environmental awareness.

Learning Outcomes

- By closely observing the physical characteristics, behavioral habits, and habitats of farm animals, our children have deepened their knowledge and understanding of these animals.
- Personally experiencing various farm facilities and interacting with a diverse range of plants and animals, the children have developed a positive attitude toward caring for nature while learning about environmental protection—such as understanding natural cycles, including how animal manure can be used as fertilizer for planting.
- During outdoor play activities, the children experienced a green lifestyle. That has further strengthened their environmental awareness through practical actions, such as bringing their own lunchboxes and water bottles and properly sorting trash.
- Through the outdoor activity, our children not only enjoyed some fun time with their peers in nature but also experienced the joy of outdoor exploration.
