Activity Introduction

Through playing in the museum's interactive exhibition areas, our children engaged in exploratory learning that fosters curiosity, creativity, and problem-solving skills. In the process, they collaborated with peers and shared experiences with one another, which helps develop their social and communication skills.

Additionally, in the "Emotions Along the Way" themed exhibition area, the children have learned to recognize five basic emotions, understood and experienced the value of these emotions, learned appropriate ways to regulate their emotions, and practiced expressing their feelings verbally, laying the foundation for the development of emotional regulation skills and resilience.

Learning Outcomes:

- The children actively engaged in various activity corners at the museum and They were able to share their favorite corners and explain their reasons in detail after the activities, demonstrating their good observational and communication skills.
- In the "Source of Water" experience area, the children were divided into small groups to complete hydro-power engineering challenges, including building dams collaboratively to regulate water flow and operating locks to transport boats, etc. This demonstrated the children's spirit of exploration, as they actively discussed ideas and conducted hands-on experiments to test their hypotheses.
- In the "Emotions Along the Way" area, the children were able to identify and name different emotions, and match and sort them according to their corresponding colors. During this process, they shared relevant examples from their own life experiences.
